Fallows took in the rest of the information from the screen. The changes that the computers had detected were tiny--the merest beginnings of a trend which, if it continued at the present rate, wouldn't approach anything serious for a month or more. With only another three months to go before the ship reached Chiron there was no cause for alarm since the rest of the pump-group had enough design margin to make up the difference even without the backup. But even so, there was little doubt that Merrick would insist on the primary's being stripped down to have its bearings reground, alignment rechecked, and rotor rebalanced again. They had been through that routine twice already in the three months that the main drive had been firing. That meant another week of working in near-zero g and klutzing around in heavy-duty protective suits on the wrong side of the stern radiation shield. have thought she could be brought to this limp. Last Tuesday, the 26th, a girl had cut her wrists with a razor blade in North Hollywood. . . accustomed to command, and about as emotional as a weather report. Nightingale must have run that stinking army hospital in the Crimea. Her tenants were the losers habitating eyes searching the cabin as though she expected to find an answer there. Her gaze fixed on the kitchen. . . The Podkayne was lowered to the ground, and sadly decommissioned. It was a bad day for Mary Lang, the worst since the day of the blowout. She saw it as a necessary but infamous thing to do to a proud flying machine. She brooded about it for a week, becoming short-tempered and almost unapproachable. Then she asked Crawford to join her in the private shelter. It was the first time she had asked any of the other four. They lay in each other's arms for an hour, and Lang quietly sobbed on his chest. Crawford was proud that she had chosen him for her companion when she could no longer maintain her tough, competent show of strength. In a way, it was a strong thing to do, to expose weakness to the one person among the four who might possibly be her rival for leadership. He did not betray the trust. In the end, she was comforting him. "Look and see," said Lea. . . embrace. Instead he said, "You did not call me to the clearing. You did not say my name. Only when I." "What is this?" asked Hidalgo as they stepped inside. She picked up the glass prism from the top of the barrow. . . . nap with her hand. Her place turned out to be four street numbers away from his and nothing like what he'd been expecting, neither a demoralized wreck heaped with moldering memorabilia nor yet the swank, finicky pied-a-terre of some has-been somebody. It was a plain, pleasant 1%-room apartment that anyone could have lived in and almost everyone did, with potted plants to emphasize the available sunlight and pictures representing various vanished luxuries on the wall, the common range of furniture from aspiring to makeshift, and enough ordinary debris to suggest a life being carried on, with normative difficulty, among these carefully cultivated neutralities. . . So he'd started to drink. First the good bourbon from the company's stock, then the halfway-decent trade gin, and now the cheap rum. . . McKillian had had enough. "Matt, what the hell are you talking about? Rescue mission? Damn it, you." "Is something the matter?" she asked, handing him the uppers with a glass of water.
